Overview

Caitlin represents clients in a variety of immigration matters, bringing a wide range of immigration experience to the firm. She was born and raised in Ithaca, New York, alongside her grandparents who were Austrian immigrants. Caitlin has always had an interest in exploring other cultures, which led her to live in Bolivia after graduating high school, and to live in Senegal during college. After receiving her B.A. in International Area Studies from Drexel University, she returned to Senegal with a Fulbright grant where she designed and led marketing research for domestic rice brands. Caitlin maintained a strong interest in immigration law and policy throughout her education, eventually leading her to pursue a law degree. After receiving her J.D. from Rutgers School of Law, she clerked for the Honorable Francis J. Vernoia of the New Jersey Appellate Division. Caitlin is admitted to practice in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. She speaks French, Spanish, and Wolof. In her free time, she enjoys swimming, traveling, and spending time with her family and friends. Caitlin strongly believes in acting as a dedicated representative for her clients.
